

Tweetable logline: Whatever you thought coffee to be is about to change with Third Wave, exploring life, love, friendship & the thirst to pursue your dreams.

Additional tweetable: Third Wave enters the wine-like world of coffee connoisseurs, but who knew that the roasted bean could be as potent as the delectable grape?

Synopsis:

A decidedly late coming-of-age story for a couple of Irish surfers, the two buddies decide that coffee is the next best thing to waves. Liam (Casey Manderson) and Sé (Graham Keane) embark on their new lives in America, the land of freedom and love – and where the Third Wave of coffee is really taking off. Their instincts for the small roasted bean are as fine as those of a wine connoisseur's palette, but who knew that the energetic bean could be as potent as the delectable grape?

While the Irish lads' involvement in the third wave coffee industry develops, so too does the interest of a lovely American lass (Vanessa Walsh) – and the need to put it on the line in order to make a difference in this new world they've become a part of.

About the Production:

"My filmmaking style is driven by honesty and an interest in the human spirit; telling compelling stories by transforming ideas into visions; and sharing pieces that are insightful with cinematic style.

This true story lends itself to being told in a feature film because it is universal: an exploration of life, love and friendship – of growing up and taking on the world in order to find out what truly matters. This compelling tale delves into the third wave coffee movement, but has reach for audiences far outside of the cafés and roasteries of Vancouver and Portland. What Sideways did for pinot noir, Third Wave will do for the third wave coffee movement from Cannes to Main Street: exploring the most universal of human experiences through the lens of a dynamic industry." – Andrew Lavigne
